

Athletic season 2023

Grant Holloway has the chance to become the second athlete after his US compatriot Greg Foster to claim three consecutive world 110m hurdles titles. Forty years on from Foster's first win at the inaugural World Athletics Championships in Helsinki, Holloway will hope to mark the anniversary year by gaining a 12th gold medal for his nation in the event.

The 25-year-old certainly seems in shape to do so, having lost just once this year – to Jamaica's Rasheed Broadbell at the Rabat Diamond League meeting on 28 May. Holloway rebounded with wins in Florence and Paris, where he clocked his season's best of 12.98, and his most recent performance is a 13.01 win in London on 23 July. Not only will he be looking to add another global title to his two world gold medals, but also to an Olympic silver claimed in Tokyo and world indoor 60m hurdles gold won in Belgrade last year.

It is Broadbell who heads this season's top list, thanks to the 12.94 PB he set to win the Jamaican title. That was the second time he has dipped under 13 seconds – the first was when winning the Lausanne Diamond League last year in 12.99.

The 23-year-old, who won the Commonwealth Games title in Birmingham last year, now sits joint 14th on the world all-time list, alongside his compatriot Hansle Parchment, who beat Holloway to the Olympic title in Tokyo.

Both athletes return to World Championships action in Budapest. Broadbell made it to the semifinals in Oregon last year, while Parchment made it to the final but was unable to race, having injured himself while warming up.

As well as his Olympic title, Parchment has world silver from 2015 and Olympic bronze from 2012 to his name. They are joined on the Jamaican team by Orlando Bennett, the 2018 world U20 silver medallist.

Sitting between Broadbell and Holloway on this season's top list is Cordell Tinch, who secured his first sub-13.00 run by clocking 12.96 at the Arkansas Grand Prix on 23 June. The 23-year-old, who started the season with a best of 13.63 to his name, has also improved his lifetime bests in the high jump and long jump in 2023 – to 2.21m and 8.16m, respectively. He finished second to Daniel Roberts at the US Championships and alongside that trio, the US team also includes Freddie Crittenden.

Shunsuke Izumiya is another athlete in PB form in 2023, having improved the Japanese record to 13.04 in Osaka at the start of June. The 2018 world U20 bronze medallist won at the Lausanne Diamond League and was also second to Holloway in London.

Wilhem Belocian and Just Kwaou-Mathey have also dipped under 13.10 this season, respectively clocking PBs of 13.07 and 13.09. They will be joined on the French team by Sasha Zhoya, the 2021 world U20 champion who won the French title in a wind-assisted (2.3m/s) 13.01. Jason Joseph has improved to a Swiss record of 13.10 this season.
